

Palliative and Hospice Care
Part 1: My response

The interprofessional healthcare team comprises nurses, medical providers, social workers, and spiritual support. Nurses advocate for the client while also tending to the needs of the client's family. Medical providers decide on the type of palliative care the client can receive. Social workers provide additional resources that assist with the client's well-being (mentally, physically, and spiritually). Spirituality support consists of chaplains, priests, etc., and they help with comfort and peace to the client. Each member has unique roles, but they all serve one purpose; to provide quality end-of-life care.
