Jocelynn texted me this afternoon to explain how she felt bad asking me questions knowing I am already stressed with everyone else in our office needing me on top of everything else on my plate. She is one of my co-workers at Manchester Urology who is also working as a Medical Assistant under her Licensed Nursing Assistant Certification. I couldn't appreciate her more than I already do. She is a hard worker and has blossomed so much since starting at our practice. She helps wherever she is needed and is always eager to learn different procedures as well as different diagnoses and how we treat them. I know she feels guilty to ask me questions but I want her to know I embrace them. It definitely helps me keep up with my multi-tasking skills and it also keeps me busy. I enjoy helping and being everyone's go-to. Hopefully, once I become a nurse, this will help me transition into my new position and with some time training as a nurse and getting used to my new position I can transition easily to a nurse manager position. It won't be a while until I transition in my nurse manager's position but the hope is when our practice moves into the new office we are building I will take on the new position as Clinical Nurse Manager at Manchester Urology Associates at Dover. Though, there has been some talk I may be taking the position in the Portsmouth office but that will depend on how much volume that office creates for itself. Until then we will be sharing staff between both offices. I am excited for this new adventure and for our practice to expand. I hope my co-workers, like Jocelynn, still feel like no matter how busy I get they can always come to me for questions and ask for help.
