When our declaration of Independence was signed Americans were of one mind to protect "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of happiness. Americas continue to struggle with, racist, laws, biased courts and housing segregation. According to Lee Ann Bell we use the term oppression rather than discrimination, bias, prejudice, or bigotry to emphasize the pervasive nature of social inequality woven throughout social institutions as well as embedded within individual consciousness.

Most people strive for justice in an unjust world, it seems like no matter how hard you try improve your conditions the system knocks you down. That's because there is no inequality in this world, an unequal distribution of income wealth. You heard the expression the rich get rich and the poor get poorer. The poor pay more taxes and why? So the rich can say rich while the poor continue paying tax, high rent infraction grows. Powerful member of the ruling elite was careful to put the social and economic barriers that oppressed the powerless people.

Justice has to exist in this sociality so all individuals have access to virial serves. Thus the social welfare structures that evolved to address poverty are a means of social control and supported social dominate and economic structures. One thing for sure when our civil liberties of any group are violated, we suffer. Need to protect the ideas of Justice with equal rights under the law
