Response to “The Peace of the Wild Things” by John Fox

Exercise

Animals as Metaphor

Eagle

One whose eyes views over mountains

Powerful like fire over the night

Strong golden bird, I admire your vision

You hunt in the sky while the shadow of your wings covers the sea

Your hands grab and do not let go

Perseverance is a one of your major keys

Straight eyes at your aim

You do not think to look back

You are fearless

You do not let the wind of the storm make you lose your focus

Wise you are to use the current to soar to greater height

Dear bird, I admire your elegance

Exercise

What Nature Teaches Us

One exercise that I would choose to do with the class is What Nature Teaches Us. The reason why I would choose this exercise is because I find amazing the way nature works around us. When we think about the nature and how in some ways it relates to our lives, it sounds crazy how two different things might be so relatable at the same time. Sometimes it's good to reflect on these things and we can come to realize that if that little thing is able to do it, then so we can. Also, I think that sometimes we need to take time and be thankful for what we have around and be grateful for it. Without it, then things would be very different. Each one has its own purpose. We just have to see it.

Cactus

I am a big a fan of cactus

Where I come from, we call it "Cacto"

Despite of the climate, extremely hot and dry habitats

It stays true to its color

In order to survive they need large amounts of water

And store them in their stems and roots for periods of dryness

It's amazing

They can live up to 300 years depending on their species

Just like rose, they have spines instead of leaves

Now we can compare the cactus to our lives,

Despite of finding ourselves in dry and extremely hot situations
we should always stay true to our faith just like a Cactus to its color

We need to have a foundation in Christ

Have some faith saved in our roots

Whenever the complicated situations pop out

We ought to have spines so that whenever something wants to harm us

We'll be protected and not be harm

Cactus have many great qualities that

Without acknowledging humans might also possess them
