the film doubt was worthwhile to me because of the cast. streep Hoffman and davis are among my favorites. to see them all together was something I had to see. this was a moving film because of the subject matter. I thought it was mainly about pedophile priest but it was much more it was about doubt the that feeling that you have when you are about to do something you know is wrong. Streep has a line in the film that is very profound and she is speaking about herself. amy adams is also in the film and is great in a supporting role. Personally I used to have visions about young boys being sexually assaulted by priest. the visions were so strong and I prayed a lot but after awhile I ask God to please take the visions from me. He didn't allow me to see the actual assault but it was the fear on the boys faces as the priest approached. this was well before it became headlines. this is one of the reasons I wanted to see the film also. what bothered me was the young boy who the priest made improper advances towards they made his character a young black boy with homosexual ideas about himself. why was that I wonder. did the writer expose something that normally isn't revealed. the mother of the boy knew her son was different and had accepted it so it seemed the mother was fighting for her son's life at school, home and in the world. I'd like to ask the writer why he wrote the boys character that way. the writer was also the director and he did an excellent job. i can't imagine what these boys went through at the hands of some priest
