1. How does the Universal Declaration of Human Rights differ from the declarations in Chapter 18? What, specifically, has been stated?

There are many Human Rights that differ from this declaration compared to the other that is listed in chapter 18. One of them is the one that states, "No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile." Another one is that, "No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment." "All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law", is another declaration. "Everyone has a right to a nationality", "Everyone has a right to move from their country", and "No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home, or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation." are all ones that have been added.

2. What historical events can you detect in the additions and wording of the twentieth-century document?

I feel like many things were taken into consideration when they were writing these declarations. One of those things being World War II. I believe that World War II was probably the major thing that had an effect on the writing. They started to make Human Rights for everyone, not just white men and even white women. Every race, gender, and nationality started to have their rights and made sure it was secure too.
