

Designing Your Life: How to Build a Well-Lived, Joyful Life by Bill Burnett and Dave Evans aided in helping me develop a plan for my life that breeds happiness. This book will be helpful to future ministry through applying design thinking to how I plan for ministry.

The Road Trip That Changed the World: The Unlikely Theory that will Change How You View Culture, the Church, and, Most Importantly, Yourself by Mark Sayers wonderfully spoke to my heart through his analysis of culture. I love talking about culture; therefore, this book will aid in my conversations with others about our earthly cultures and the religious culture.

Douglas Stone, Bruce Patton, and Sheila Heen's Difficult Conversations: How to Discuss What Matters Most, Creative Minority: Influencing Culture Through Redemptive Participation was great in urging readers to consider the opposing party's positions in conflict. This book will aid in how I can resolve conflict in future situations and how I can aid in resolving conflict between others.

David Seamands' Healing for Damaged Emotions was supplemental to the material we learn at ATS. His work offers valuable insight how to we can practically engage others in ministry and will be beneficial to how I can minister to individuals in my future ministries.

Dr. Rob Reimer's Soul Care is deeply life changing. For those who feel stuck in their spiritual journey, it offers the needed breakthrough that can only come through Jesus Christ. I'm already planning to use this book in ministry as I believe it is a life changing for those wanting to go further in their spiritual journey.

David Benner's book, The Gift of Being Yourself, is profound in empowering individuals to embrace the person God has made us to be. I will definitely refer back to this book in my future ministries as I believe it offers power teachings of peace and confidence in a believer through simply embracing ourselves as God created us.

Lastly, Dr. Martin Sander's book, The Power of Mentoring: Shaping People Who Will Shape the World, is simply powerful, I wish I had a mentor like this. If anything, this book will always be with me as I long for those after me to accomplish what my generation will not be able to.
