UNIT ONE
Question 3

The author had noted that several sub-disciplines of psychology may be relevant to the experience of the worshippers at the Spirit Filled church. Most of the integration of psychology and Christian theology had only focused on clinical and counseling issues and I believe that this is more than sufficient. When speaking about integrating psychology and theology, counseling and clinical issues are areas where this can happen and can take place. In that church, it was needed to dig deeper into what happened psychologically because they were so involved in Christianity that they forgot about the entire psychology. Psychology plays a big role in Christians when counseling or figuring out clinical issues.
