1. Descartes started doubting what he knew from being because he felt that he had just accepted it without any reason or proof. He had just determined that since it was what he was taught or told that it must have been true and that he had to just accept it.
2. Descartes realized that he could not doubt that God existed. He saw all that was around him and thought that there was obvious proof that God existed and created everything in the world that we live in. He also believed this because he believed that everything we know is innate and that God abled us to be innate.
3. Locke doesn't believe that there is innate knowledge, because he believes that we learn and add to our knowledge as we grow up. An example that he gave was that a child does not know that $3+4=7$ until that child goes to school and learns how to count.
