

1-But neither of the two large and powerful groups of nations can take comfort off our current course - both sides were overburdened by the cost of modern weapons, both rightfully alarmed by the constant spread of the deadly atom, but both are vying to change this uncertain terror balance. remains the hand of humanity's last war.

Now the trumpet is calling us again - not as a call to carry weapons, but as the weapons we need - not as a call to war but as a call to bear the burden of a long twilight struggle, though we have fought, year after year and year after year, with hope to be patient " - a struggle against man's common enemies: tyranny, poverty, disease and war.

So let's start over - remembering that kindness is not a sign of weakness on either side, and that sincerity is always subject to evidence. Let's never bargain out of fear. But let's never be afraid to bargain.

Instead of diving deep into the problems that divide us, both sides should investigate which problems unite us.

Let both sides, for the first time, prepare serious and decisive proposals for inspection and control of weapons - and bring absolute power to destroy other nations under absolute control of all nations.

Let both sides try to summon the wonders of science instead of horror. Let's explore the stars, conquer deserts, eradicate diseases, touch the ocean depths and encourage art and trade together.

Let both sides, in every corner of the world Isaiah's "remove the heavy burdens ... (and) let the oppressed be free."

And if a beachhead can push back the forest of doubt, let both sides participate in creating not a new balance of power, but a new legal world where the strong are just, the weak safe and peace. protected.

All this will not end in the first hundred days. It will not end either in the first thousand days or in the life of this Administration, perhaps even in our life on this planet. But let's get started.

In your hands, my compatriots will rest more than I do to the eventual success or failure of our course. Ever since this country was founded, every generation of Americans has been called to testify to its national loyalty. Graves of young Americans answering the call for service surround the world.

3-Although President Kennedy faces serious problems related to poverty and civil rights, he stands behind it and stands behind her strong nation that she can achieve this even though she has this concern.

4-Citizens of the world: Ask not what America will do for you, but what we can do together for human freedom.

Finally, whether you are an American citizen or a global citizen, ask us for the same high standards of power and sacrifice we ask of you here. With a good conscience, our only decisive reward, the last judge of our work with history, let us lead the lands we love, seek His blessing and His help, but knowing that God's work on earth should really be ours here.
