The regions I chose were

The Amazon

The Andes

The Southwest

The Mesoamerica/ Caribbean

The Patagonia

Patagonia is where most natives settled at, it reaches South America which includes many Spanish speaking countries. I discovered many wooden artifacts that I'm also familiar with such as a wooden drum, a wooden boat, a wooden mask, a wooden bow and etc, they all have tribal markings. I choose this because it spoke to me especially regarding my culture.

Andes is also native, it shared a lot of unusual selections of symbolism and art forms. It focused on many artistic expressions and has relation to many Spanish cultures. I discovered many weird tribal markings on these artifacts such as a Nazca bowl, they're pendants, there's a mirror, there's a vessel etc. I choose this because I've once learned about the Andes when I was in high school history class.

Southwest is where Pueblo reside to tell about their ancestor's journey through canyons and mesas. This also has Spanish relations as well, I discovered a sandal, a blanket, a stick, a mug and etc, they focus on an orange brownish color on their artifacts. I choose this because Southwest to me is pretty authentic and unique to learn about for some reason.

Mesoamerica/ Caribbean is most definitely my favorite which are the Caribbeans which I have a strong connection to. The Caribbean Sea is known there, they're several different languages that are being spoken. It gave a great rise to many things we have today. I discovered a belt, an arrow, the dead sun God, a seat, the wind God and etc that gives me an african tribal vibe to it. I choose this because I'm from the Caribbeans and I always would like to learn more about my culture.

Amazon is known as The Amazon River, people of the Amazon overcame many struggles. I discovered a chomo, a horn, a bench, a jar, a headring, a basket and etc. I loved the many colors that each expressed. I chose this because I always wondered about the Amazon and how things run down there.
