

My daring kid

My younger kid is a daring child. She dares to try anything that she is interested in. She got a bicycle for her 5 years birthday. Without a bicycle auxiliary wheel, she tried three times and she could ride herself without me holding her. At 6 years old she had skating lessons. After the 30 minutes lesson she could walk slowly on the ice. She told me that the coach taught her how to stand up if she falls, so she was not afraid of falling. At 8 years old, it was the first time that I took her to the camelback ski facility. After 90 minutes training she could ski on a beginner's piste. The next day she could ski on an intermediate ski trail and the next year she could ski on an advanced ski trail. She must have fallen, but she said she was not afraid of falling pain and falling on the snow does not hurt. She is a daring kid. She always asked questions in girls scout meetings when allowing everyone to ask questions. She said she wanted to be an engineer and creative distinctive jewellery designer. One day she will be a good design engineer because she is a daring person.
