

Anthropology

When it comes down to leaders in the church, many people are often met with the fact that a man is in charge or given the leadership role. While women aren't known for leadership positions such as their male counterparts are. Women being leaders in the world in general is something many people don't see often, or aren't too fond of. Can you just imagine what it's like in the church if it's already like this in society? Women are just as capable of leading and teaching men as so do men teach women. The reason that women are capable is because just as man was made in the likeness of Jesus, women were made in that same light as well. Meaning they are able to comprehend things and provide knowledge especially if they have received a calling to do so. Women and men may have different attributes to them but they are made in unison to coexist with one another. Women can be teachers of men because not only are they capable but many times just as a male pastor gets his calling to preach so can a woman. Christians within the church and general society can't keep trying to play the role of God and push rules that make them comfortable. Only God and that one person can know what the journey is and if a woman gets the calling to teach and preach then that business resides with God and that person not with those who feel as they know best. With there being numerous amounts of conversations about women having leadership and teaching roles, one can understand why it is hard for women to reach out for help in trying to speak in the church. Also these conversations provide a perspective that dives deeper into the Bible as to why many think only men should be leaders and teachers in the church. It is obtainable for women to be known as leaders in the Christian church and throughout life itself within the society they live in today, but is everyone willing to listen to and see those changes?

Gregory A. Boyd, Paul R. Eddy Across the Spectrum, 2009, United States of America, Baker Academic, p.249-250

The Bible, 1 Corinthians 14:34

Yaholo, A Biblical Case for Women Leaders in the Church (Yes, That Means Pastors, Too), Jul 30, 2018

Marg WOMEN CHURCH LEADERS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT, Jul 28, 2010