Who am I as a writer?

I can say that I am a new writer. I don't have much experience in writing but with the help of this class I believe that I will be able to tap into the writing side of me. However if I can say anything about me writing I would say that I would be an encouraging writer. My writing will come from experiences that I have in life. I like to write about encouragement on spiritual aspects on my Instagram. I share a lot of messages with my brothers and sisters in Christ and mostly of encouraging messages from the word of God from the Bible.

When I was younger I used to write a lot of raps with my friends and we would go to the studio and record. Anything that came to my mind I would write down in my notepad. Sometimes when I was away from home, I used to write letters to my grandmother. Those letters were filled with emotions of how much I missed her and my family. When she would write back, the letters would be so uplifting, encouraging, and she would not leave out a single detail about anything.

When I post encouraging thoughts on Instagram, I anticipate to point my followers to Christ. I truly have not had much motivation to want to write.

I am more motivated to read. I can identify myself as a reader more than a writer. I believe that is from my lack of writing experience that I enjoy reading more than writing. Since I have become a Christian, I am inspired to learn how to become a better writer. I plan to use my writing skills that I will learn here at Nyack College to help my children have healthier writing skills. One day

God willing , I can write a book about my testimony and my experience with my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Considering these things, I want to use my learning experience in English to write better. While here at Nyack, It would benefit me in writing my papers better as well as in my field of work when I do graduate. I may also use these experiences in some sermons that I might preach in the near future. There really is no limits to where this writing experience will take me. As I remember when my grandmother would send me letters while I was away, this encourages me to want to write my thoughts and inspirations down. She would be so proud of me today.
