

Moise Walters

English 102

19 October 2021

“Poetry as no big deal” is the title of this poem. The author states that writing poetry without rhyme is similar to playing tennis without a net. One could analyze that the point he is trying to prove there is that there is absolutely no point in doing so. He describes a poet as an individual who has the willingness to not be held captive by their own limitations. One could think that he is trying to say that in poetry you must be open minded. Being that poetry is a creative experience, being open minded is imperative.

When the author goes on to talk about writing a long string of lines without stopping, maybe that is for writers block. Many times, individuals get writers block because they cannot think straight which obviously blocks their feelings. There was also mentioned a number of exercises in which nouns and adjectives were used. It is quite interesting to see how individuals use poetry in their own unique way.

Some other topics touched throughout this story were the different forms in which poetry is used. Poetry comes in verbal and written forms as well. In the video we had to watch, it spoke about rappers such as Tupac Shakur and Notorious Big being poets in their own respect. Later in this story, the author mentioned a formula in which all lines must mention a color or shape. One could see what the author is trying to do there. Poetry is a truly a respectable art form.