

Hansel Almanzar
Professor Stubbs
Global Literature

Gloss Paper

Love is depicted in various ways all throughout the chapters. Enkidu changes from a wild man into a decent one considering Gilgamesh and the love they developed for one another. Gilgamesh had undergone changes due to the relationship he had with Enkidu, Gilgamesh changes from an oppressor into a model ruler and legend. Sexual love among Ishtar and Gilgamesh, and Enkidu and the prostitute is another sort of fondness that is accessible consistently in the epic. We discover that Ishtar is attracted to Gilgamesh, Ishtar approaches Gilgamesh while he was washing his body and says "Come, Gilgamesh, be you my bridegroom! Grant me your fruits, O grant me! Be you my husband and I your wife!" (48). We can see the wide extent of friendship all through the story. They become companions, go on journeys together, battle together and at last after Enkidu's demise we can see exactly how profound that bond was. Gilgamesh is distressed by the deficiency of his dear companion, saying "My beloved friend is dead, I will mourn as long as I breathe, I will sob for him like a woman who has lost her only child" (p.77)" The love that Gilgamesh has for Enkidu makes him wander the wild and quest for a lifestyle choice for eternity. He can't bear what he has seen happen to his companion. He feels powerless subsequent to losing his companion. I think most of the story is about the love the two have for each other and we see how powerful love can be to people. Enkidu puts a beware of Gilgamesh's anxious incredible energies and Gilgamesh puts Enkidu out of his egotism. Despite the fact that Enkidu at last bites the dust leaving Gilgamesh hurt and confounded in view of his companionship with him Gilgamesh is currently better ready to one come out better as a lord and two relate to his people groups interest making him a superior chief and individual. This not just shows the significant job of affection, sentiments, and kinship yet it likewise shows us how much an individual can improve with the perfect individual or individuals around them.