

Rudy Lopez

Film 12 Angry Men Questions

- 1- Yes, the movie did remind me of an aspect of my life and I guess it applies to everyone. People question you or judge you in different aspects of yourself, from where you are to what you eat. People ask in their mind every sort of questions in their mind about you, someone people see the good and bad while others only see one part of you and judges you for it. Others don't care such as the guy in the movie, changed from guilty to not guilty because he was tired.
- 2- I don't really see a lot of movies or books, but what I do know that people judge each other based on their first interaction with each other. First impressions, and then their background are how people conclude about others and then its hard for them to see someone differently. There needs to be a big thing happening for a person to change their mind about somebody
- 3- The part that caught my attention in the movie, was when they were talking about how the person got killed by the kid. That how the knife was stabbed though the kid was shorter than the murdered. Also, how each person gave their opinion, about their view and how one guy knew how a razor blade knife fight went and how the weapon was hold.
- 4- The racist man talks about kid as a animal, stating he knows all about their species, like he has studied them for something. Showing the audience that he is racist. Also he indicates that its in their nature to act as such and hurt because they don't think life is worth it. The responses of the people around is kind of confudin, they might have stood up because they didn't agree or they might have been thinking of what the guy was saying and evaluating his reasoning.