12 Angry Men Response

- 1.) The film actually reminds me of an experience I had in my life. I had to go to court when I was 14 years old for doing something I shouldn't have. Me knowing that I got caught making a mistake I knew I was guilty so me being guilty I had to do a year put away from the outside.

- 2.) Watching the scene in which the man spoke his racist monologue, it reminded me of both the book and movie "monster." It reminded me because watching that scene reminded me of the time in "monster" when the main character of the story was charged for a murder just because he fit the stereotype of an African American accused of being a gang member.

- 3.) I honestly found myself interested in the film when they voted whether or not he was guilty or innocent. What exactly grabbed my attention was when they were angry the one juror said he was innocent. That grabbed my attention because at first I always thought that it was always what the majority rules. but it is interesting how they all have to agree. But, in my opinion I find it upsetting how a suspect's freedom is depending on the choice of a random jury full of regular citizens.

4.) The scene of the racist man was quite interesting. The jury wanted to find the man angry so that the suspect is to be found guilty and face death penalty. The jurors reacted hostile and violently because one juror believed the suspect was innocent. So to try to convince him, seven of the jurors each explained why they thought he was guilty and deserved the death penalty.
