

1. What is the nature of the cosmos and the natural world? Cosmos is the ordered structure of the universe. God created the entire universe versus the natural world mankind helped create certain aspects. Cosmos is a system not worked by humans or any laws. The natural world has laws and is also developed. Earth is a part of the cosmos because mankind can't create it. God is the creator of heaven, earth and the world (Cosmos).
2. What constitutes and justifies proper social order? Social order is when society works together to maintain stability and status. Certain social structures, behaviors, beliefs and values help create social order. It involves individuals to agree and share certain rules and laws. Some people hold more power than others so they are the ones to enforce the rules to have a flow of social order.
3. What principles and ethics would make the decision about right and wrong behavior? Having moral principles would be a reason that helps make a decision right or wrong. It can be different for certain individuals due to how they were raised and what may be important to them in life. Religion can also play a part because it is what you believe that can influence you.
4. I based all my answers on religion, culture, traditions and my political views. As a child of God I know God is the creator of all living things and the universe. So this relates to my religion and how I was raised. In today's world good morals and ethics is something you learn from young and instill in your children. You learn from a young age to have good morals and standards. In today's world we operate by a system that sets laws and if we don't follow them we are given consequences.
