Final draft of Heaven's Miracles

Miracles from Heaven is based on a true story. The film is not a bad or good movie to watch. The film is based on the testimony and dramatization of a spiritual movie about a young girl named Anna Beam, who finds herself very sick and near death. She experienced a lot. One night, Anna's mom, Christy Beam, does her nightly prayer, going to each of her kids' rooms and doing their prayer with them. Later that night, when Anna runs to the bathroom and throws up, her mom wonders if it's something that she ate at the barbecue party during the day. Christy's father, Kevin, suggests that she take Anna to the doctor to check on her. The next day, Christy and Kevin drove Anna to the gastroenterologist in hopes of finding out what was wrong with her. On their way to see the best doctor, Christy looks back at Anna, who is sleeping with her belly exposed in the back seat. Christy and Kevin took their daughter to another doctor, who, like the others, said there was nothing wrong with Anna. After a while, the doctor declares that Anna is allergic to pizza. That same day at family dinner, Anna's parents agreed to not have pizza anymore as a family. In the middle of the night, Anna wakes up in excrement pain, calling out to her parents for help. Her mom wakes up and runs up the stairs to her daughter's room, calling out for her husband to come as well. They rush Anna to the hospital that same night as their friend comes to babysit Anna's sisters. That same night at the hospital, the doctor started to argue with Anna's parents, saying that she was just fine and had just suffered an extreme case of acid reflux. When Christy starts talking back to the doctor, frustrated over her daughter's pain,

A pediatrician diagnoses Anna with abdominal obstruction after running another test on her early in the morning and informs her parents that he must clear the obstruction immediately or she will die. Then the doctor tells them what kind of pain Anna is going through. Then the doctor tells them that they're taking Anna for surgery, as the nurse inserts the tubes into her nose. Anna is scared while her mom watches, crying for her daughter as her husband holds her down and tells her everything is going to be alright. Her parents wait while the pastor sits with Anna's sisters. After everything was said and done, the pediatrician who performed Anna's surgery emerged from the operating room and informed Anna's parents that, while the surgery was successful, he discovered numerous problems and that Anna has intestinal motility disorder. After all that Anna's dad saw, I came to realize how his daughter is struggling with her life, so he tells his wife that Anna's body can't handle all the pain she's going through. A few weeks later, Anna's mom manages her daughter's care, making all the impossible schedules and making sure that she's keeping track of her daughter's medication and her feeding needs. Anna was weaker at this point, and she's uncomfortable with the tube inserted into her nose. Her clothes began to shrink as the days passed, and her stomach continued to grow larger than before. Anna's mom prayed and asked God why he hadn't healed her daughter. Christy and Anna travel to Boston together the following days to the Boston hospital. Christina and Anna leave Boston Horton Hospital and go to a dinner at one of Boston's restaurants, where they meet a waitress named Angela after Anna spills the water on the floor. Angela asks them where they're from and why they're here in Boston after she notices how big Anna's stomach is. Angela offers to take them around Boston, but Christina hesitates to go with Angela. When Anna started to beg her to say yes, she agreed to go. On the next day, Christina and Anna wait for Angela, and when she shows up, she says they'll start at the aquarium, but Christina is nervous about the whole experience of traveling with a stranger, but she loves the way Anna's happy, so she calms herself down. After a few weeks, Christy went to see the pastor, Scott, who apologized to her for what the other members of the church had said to her, but Christy remained firm in her decision not to believe in God and to never return to the church. But the pastor doesn't believe that's the reason why Christina hasn't come back to the church, and Christina admitted that she doesn't understand why God would allow her daughter to experience such awful pain. After a few weeks, Anna is sitting at the door, looking out, when her sister Abby approaches her and asks if she wants to play outside. Anna agrees, and they go outside and play soccer, but when the ball goes towards the tree, a butterfly flies up, and Abby asks Anna if she wants to climb the tree like they used to. Anna says no, but her sister says she'll help her, so they climb up, and Anna was enjoying it. But when they sit on one of the branches, it quickly begins to collapse. Then Abby makes Anna get off the falling branches, and as she does, she falls into the tree, which is hollow on the inside. She falls down and lies unconscious at the bottom as Abby panics and goes get her parents. As the police and the firemen come to help Anna, they climb the tree and call out to her, but she's unresponsive. Medical personnel and others join in to help Anna, but the tree has rotted out from the bottom, so they send someone in from the top while Christina goes to the tree and starts to beg God for Anna's survival. Then everyone comes to the tree and joins in the prayer. The police and the firemen manage to get Anna out, but she is still unconscious and covered with cuts. A helicopter comes and takes Anna to the hospital while her parents sit outside and wait, but when the doctor approaches, he is surprised to tell them that she has no broken bones or bruises. A few days pass, and Anna is better than ever, but her mom notices something off. Anna told her parents that she's not in pain anymore. A few days later, Christina notices that Anna's stomach has returned to normal. She calls her husband, and when they ask what happened, she tells them to relax because he told her she'd be fine; her mother asks who he is, and Anna answers, "God." When she fell down the tree, she touched a white butterfly, and then she went to a better place. In that place, Anna spoke to God; she told him she wanted to stay, but God told her that she needed to return. She had warmed up perfectly by the time she returned. Her mom was shocked, and then she went to the doctor the following day, but the doctor was shocked that Anna had made a full recovery.

This is very good to watch, the film teaches us the importance of faith, family, courage and pulling through hard times.
