Intro to self

My name is Hannah Roos, I am a freshman at Alliance University. I am studying social work in hopes to work overseas with children in the adoption/ foster care system which is my dream job and life goal. I was born in Wisconsin, and moved to France when I was seven as an infant and lived there until I was 16 when I attended Black Forest Academy to attend high school. Now I am a student here. Although I was born in Wisconsin I would say I am from Minnesota in the States because that is where we would go when we were in the States.

My relationship with Christ is one which began at an early age. I first became Christian when I was three and got baptized at the age of 10 while I was in France at a church which I later felt as though I abandoned many of the beliefs which the CMA supports. Because of this and the church I was forced to attend in high school my faith began to falter. However as time has progressed, my faith has grown stronger than ever.

One person I look up to is my mom. She has been with me since day one, and has shown me such great strength and endurance through the hard parts of being a missionary and a mom. She stands up for herself and her dreams and is willing to show people who she is. She was willing to give up her career as a physiologist to raise me and my sister. Then later she moved to France to listen to God's calling, and is now renewing her masters in hopes to work in member care with a mission organization.
