

Jonas Trofort

English 101

29 January 2023

Start Time: 7:31

End Time: 7:46

Freewrite

I have a love/hate relationship with writing. I am not used to writing in English but still do with friends and family to get the hang of it. I normally write in my native language, creole, but write in English for school or in texts to better my English language skills. In my opinion, my english is not that good, which is why I've chosen to go to a school that is english based, knowing it'd help improve my writing and speaking skills in English. My lovely wife and friends say my english is great and help me with grammatical things but that is what makes english harder for me. I do not completely understand the grammar that comes along with it. I often answer back "I'm" instead of " I am" when having a normal conversation. My friends have taught me that it is I am instead of I'm. I also do not completely understand past, present, and future tense as well when writing but I try my best. To be honest, I hate writing more than I love it. I lack confidence when writing in English. I think I have the basics of English, my level being intermediate but want it to be better and hope to get the confidence I want when speaking and writing in english.