

Hello! My name is Yaiza Castillo and I'm 20 years old. I'm looking forward to this semester and this class. My mom is from Puerto Rico, my dad is from the Dominican Republic and I was born in New York. However, I don't think that makes me any less Puerto Rican or Dominican. I am currently in nursing school studying to become a nurse. It is my first semester in the clinical/nursing program and if I'm being honest it's a lot, but I trust that God will guide me through. To me, Jesus is my rock and firm foundation. Jesus has done more for me than I could've ever imagined. He has transformed me and made me the person I am today. He has loved me like no other. I am grateful each and every day for who He is in my life. In my life, I dream about always maintaining the will of God in my life and keeping God at the center of it all. I also dream about having a family to call mine, husband and children. I dream about the calling that God has placed on my hands and how it is going to develop and evolve throughout the transgression of my life. One person I admire is my mom because she is truly a woman of God. She is the best example I could've ever had and she puts her best efforts into everything she does. My mom never gives up and is always there when you need someone to listen to or someone to give you advice. I am the way I am because of who she is.
