I am technically Ecuadorian because my parents are, though I have been born and raised in NYC

I am a Biology major. So far, I plan on doing something like being a pediatrician, though perhaps that may change over the course of my education.

I consider Jesus as the lover of my soul. He is the one who sacrificed every part of Himself so that I may have a chance to live in eternal peace with God. Jesus is the one person who has loved and respected me regardless of the ocean of sins that I have committed. To me, Jesus is like a teacher who gently reminds me on the path to follow Him for the benefit of our relationship.

I dream of continuously worshipping God through the gifts that He has given me. Mostly through the form of music. My greatest desire is to have the ability to express my worship through music in an effortless fashion. I want music to eventually be a fluent language and an instrument to be an extension of my body.

One person I admire is my mother because she is always busy and still makes time to serve others. Whether she is serving in the Church, her community, or her family. My mother used to be a high-paid doctor, but rather than pursuing her dreams of continuing to work in a hospital, she dropped all of her work to raise my two brothers and me. I have been blessed immensely to have been raised by my mother since, for some families, that would not even be an option. I am certain that my parents could have hired people to babysit me, but regardless of such a convenience, my mother still left her job to help her children grow. Without my mother, I would not be here, which can be seen literally as she is my biological mother, however, what I am really trying to say is that I would not have ever reached this point in my life without her.
