3. What are some of the changes that have come about in the music industry as a result of changes in technology?

With the rapid advancement of technology, we have witnessed several changes in the music business. We have seen some of the most important developments in music creation. As technology has evolved, it has also grown more accessible, allowing more individuals to have access to music-production tools without needing to visit a real music studio. Other notable advances in music technology include the potential to stream more music for artists due to the increasing amount of individuals having access to social media, so we've seen a shift from people buying CDs and physical albums to streaming through phone or computer, which, in my opinion, was a significant move because it allowed many musicians to get their platforms out there and have their music streamed.

4. Discuss areas of the music business that still need to evolve in order to adequately adapt to the changing ways people are creating and accessing music.

Even though the music industry has evolved dramatically in recent years, I believe it still has a lot of room to grow. I believe that the music industry could adapt to many things, but one of the most important changes they could make is to make music more accessible to everyone, because I sometimes feel like only well-off privileged people can become musicians, because you need funds to afford the technology and software needed to create music, such as a microphone, computer, and so on. I also believe that we should remove some of the restrictions in music and push toward more diverse sounds, such as Christian rap. Christian rap is an excellent example of hybrid music since it incorporates aspects of rap music with gospel music in order to appeal to all Christians.
