

Chapter 3 “Extending the Frame”

Pyramid Format: Kingdom of Israel

Questions:

1. How does your society resemble other societies in this chapter?

This format resembles other societies by having those with power/leaders always at the top of the pyramids. Those are known to be the most powerful with an easygoing lifestyle than the rest and the bottom. Societies, it is known to have divisions and put everyone in a category. Although putting those into categories isn't always a fair judgment because that just means everyone on there is either better or less fortunate than the other, making it an unfit society. For instance, the Kingdom of Israel is known to have Pharaohs at the top of the pyramid as also known as the monarch of the kingdom and was regarded as the highest level or class in the social order of ancient Israel. The monarch was the only individual with greater authority or power(Hierarchystructure, 2017). As referred to in the textbook, these hierarchies with high amounts of power weren't just connected as networks of their trading but as their unique cultural aspects that were shared upon different networks.

2. How is it unique?

This specific kingdom of Israel is unique in its way because it has a monarchy that in several cultures it has been proven to be successful. In its way of building a kingdom, it shows how this social class had an influence today when it comes to the middle class, minority, and obviously those above the rest with much power for example the government could kind of be considered to be at the top of the pyramid.
