McClelland Theory Exercise

In this image I see a gentleman sitting looking at a photo. Trying to interpret it better I would say that he might be at work, as he is wearing a tie, and he might be looking at a picture of his family. It could be that he is missing his family and wants to return home. He seems to be doing something with his hands, and his features look as if he might be sad. I would say that he is in his office, with the windows open on a sunny day. In the photo, it looks to me like the gentleman's family, and I think it is his wife and two children. This could mean that he is away from them and that he misses being with them. The whole image is in black and white and so it can mean the sadness, longing and the fact that the man is away from his family and so he is looking intensely at the photo in front of him.

To conclude, I interpret this image as a gentleman missing his family, who is at work and therefore looks at the photo where the people he misses are to ease this longing and possible sadness.
