

What are the nature of the cosmos and the natural world?

From a spiritual ideology, the nature of the cosmos is that God created heaven and the earth. The creation lasted about six days, and God rested on the seventh day. God parted the clouds during those six days of work and separated the water from the land. Created creatures for the sea and the ground. Some animals can breathe and function on both land and sea. God also created the forest and its many trees. The lake, rivers, and the many oceans. All these are God's creations following my spiritual belief.

Man's scientific law states that the universe is created through a big bang theory. The separation of land from water happened through nature's course. Humans came about through the development of animal-looking humans, such as chimpanzees. Trees and other agricultural things, such as hills and waterfalls, happened over time due to events that occurred over some time.

What constitutes and justifies proper social order?

The idea of how the world works and who should make efforts to keep the world going orderly is an effort towards social order. During the (Before Common Era) BCE, 's ideology of math, people who could read, write and understand science occupied the highest ranking in society. Their thinking is what molded the way society ran during that time. Those philosophies still govern today's society in a way, meaning that people from elite colleges like MIT and particular institutions and programs such as astrophysics, Centers for Disease Control and prevention, and the New England Journal of Medicine produce articles that would shape society. As it were back in the BCE, the social order is still a significant factor in today's society.

What principles guide ethics or individual decisions about correct and wrong behavior?

The idea during the BCE is that one philosopher proposed that education would help a man make good decisions. Having an education will guide his thinking from right from wrong behavior. Confucius thought that education could change a man's life and his society. He believed a virtuous man was better than a man inheriting his noble status. A righteous man will value a way of life that foster a harmonious society and people of all levels are treated fairly. He thought people should treat others like they would want to be treated. If our political leaders followed God's teachings or second best, Confucius' philosophies, the world's society would be a better place for all mankind.

To sum up, the thinking of those cosmos, my religious belief guides me; God made heaven, the earth, and all things in the universe. The need for social order in today's society is vital—the senseless killing of humans, food insecurities, and wars worldwide are becoming a cultural norm because it's happening more frequently in countries you wouldn't expect such things to happen. Knowing how much food is wasted daily right here in the USA and in the same place, it's a known fact that families are experiencing food insecurities.

Compared to the Axial age, Societies of today have come a long way, but we still experience or mirror some of their fragmented philosophies. I guess my Bible did prepare me, specifically in Matthew 26:11, when Jesus said we will always have the poor amongst us. If the world isn't following Jesus Christ's teachings, there will never be a perfectly organized society where everyone is treated fairly.