

How would you define your answers to questions about the nature of the cosmos, social order and individual ethics in today's world?

What do you base your responses on? - your religious faith? your political ideals? some of the founding documents of our nation? or is it your culture and traditions?

The nature of the cosmos is also known as the nature of the universe. Always felt like politics and science was the way to base my responses on for things that came with the way the world was made up. My parents both raised me believing in evolution and the big bang theory. I guess I could say that I believe this because of my family traditions and that my family passed this theory on to me.

For social order I believe that it is inevitable. In every different country or society there is a social order. For example the United States' social order is based off of upper, middle and lower class. This is important because there are some societies that try to get rid of it and make everyone equal but no matter what someone has it it better.

I believe that individual ethics is based off of my political ideas. I believe this because I act a certain way that fits into our society. I feel like my religion also goes into it because I value certain morals based off of my religion like staying modest and not using profanity. I feel like individual ethics is both religion and political. My parents have raised me well to value how I act in different scenes.