

The most difficult part for me was the conversation with the patient. Because the patient was still asleep, I couldn't talk to the patient. So I couldn't ask the patient exactly while talking about whether he was sick or where. So I had a conversation with the patient's family. The patient's family explained that he was taking medicine to sleep. And the patient's family wanted to leave the patient alone. So I followed the assigned nurse as much as I could and learned what the patient needed the most. One thing I'm worried about patients is not agreeing with them or not sure, stopping drugs and changing treatment. The patient can choose because they are the patient's guardian, but I hope it will be the best choice for the patient's health. The part that I felt I achieved the most was when I fed the patient using an NG tube and heard if there was any residue. The nurse told me to listen to the sound to check the response through the feeding tube. The sound was quite loud and I was taught that it was normal when it sounded. And the next achievement is that I feel more confident when dealing with patients. And when I'm dealing with patients, I've become increasingly aware of what is important and what's to emphasize. And when I knew the patient's disease in advance, I learned what areas to focus on. So I think I will treat the patient with more confidence when I deal with the patient next week. The skills I learned were making beds and washing patients. I also learned the reason for using this skill very accurately, and if I take the test next week, I can confidently try it. The plan for the patient is for the patient to receive comfortable and stable protection. The nurse in this unit tried to explain the patient in detail and ask a lot of questions about things I didn't know or didn't understand. And with the help of classmates and instructor, we practiced together not to make mistakes. And because the instructor was asked to explain in words what tests to be performed before going to the patient, it was possible to perform them accurately. For I know the plans I have for you," declares the Lord, "plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future.(Jeremiah 29:11) This patient is 90s. So even though I am sick, I want to give hope, not despair. And I believe that God will give that hope. When treating culturally different patients, I think we should be able to do it with respect and understanding of the patients. First of all, it is also important to know in which direction the patient wants to receive treatment. Although the patient is old, I hope the disease will get better with the help of family members and medical staff. And I believe that there will be more hope as patient gets better.
