

What is the nature of the cosmos and the natural world?

Well, this question is really hard to answer as there is no correct answer because no one can know. I grew up learning about both main ideas of where we and our world came from. I was in touch with people who believe exactly what their religion says. They e.g. claim that God created Adam and Eve and the world the way it's written in the bible. But I also know a lot of people who don't believe in this at all. I believe I am still on my way finding my very own personal answer to this question but at the moment I would say that evolution created us and the earth wasn't directly created by God. But the problem is where did the big bang come from. And this is the point where my belief begins. I guess God was the one who did that, so he also indirectly created us the earth and the whole universe, I just don't believe he placed us on earth without any evolution.

What constitutes and justifies proper social order?

The perfect social order is first extremely effective, which means they can quickly decide on important stuff and produce everything they need, and second it is fair to everyone inside this community. When everyone is content with their social situation and at the same time the community is able to manage every political and economic situation, the social order is perfect in my opinion.

If everyone is happy about the situation there is no reason to change it which justifies it as the best way.

What principles guide ethics, or individual decisions about right and wrong behavior?

First, all our parents taught us principles while raising us and building a basic foundation which we live with. There are also other principles like the ten commandments which strongly influence our lives, especially the religious people. The government also bears no small part in how we live and act, as they are responsible for the rules inside a country, state, and city. We are influenced by a lot of different areas which make us who we are but we are all still different. So the decision of what is wrong and what is right is still often not possible to answer, as principles and ethics apply differently to different people.
