Worst Jobs in History Questions:

1. Throughout the film, we see the many different ways they would work, and perform in the working aspect. They used muscle for many of the jobs, carrying heavy loads, using axes, and picks. These people had multiple different jobs, Living off the land was a common way to live. While using boats, they had oars that would be used to push and direct them within the water, but when they found the right channel the water could take them providing them with the ability to use less muscle and depend on the water. These jobs all seem muscle based. They involve a lot of work and I could see doing this everyday long, and painful.
2. I personally feel the worst job was picking up the horses dung, with their hands. I could only imagine the smell as well as using your hands. This is by far the grossest. They take the dung and mix it with water and straw. With that they use their feet and mush it all up. Once that's done they take their hands and pick up large amounts and spread it all over the wall. This is the job I think is the worst. I say this because I couldn't imagine the smell of the house dung, and the terrible textures involved.
