

Sheril A Hall

Prof: Lyndell O`Hara

World His 113 OB

February 20,2023

Alexander was brought up in opulent wealth and splendor. He developed an insatiable appetite for knowledge and conquest at the hand of his father who taught him the art of war. The King had a mighty personal army which was created from the elite members of the society, which was operating from the ancient structure of the Aegean society of a supreme ruler with a military force backing him. Under Aristotle tutelage Alexander was taught to think analytically. He began to see beyond the scope of what if, This trajectory on thought processes gave him insight into the world, and created a mindset that saw world dominance as the field he must conquer.

With the conquest of Greece under his belt Alexander began to shift visions around him. The nay sayers in Greece were now paying attention to his advancement into the different spheres of the world. The political pundit was looking at the moves like a Chess game, causing great anticipation because of the key player.

He rearranged different countries' governmental control by inserting his loyal's, yet keeping the leaders in authority so as to shift power, yet keep it in obedience to him. He intersected war strategies by creating divergence that allows for opponents to get a breath of space to maneuver; which in foresight was a tactic to get the opponents to come in line with his plan which would secure his victory.

The then structure under the Aegean rule never had such a foresight either in India, China or the Persian empire. They focus on their Military might, with little insight as to the depth of their countries advancement. Had he not intervened with his strategic usurping of Aegean rulership, bringing the Axial age methodology of thinking, beyond the scope and implementing ideas with cost effective strategies and created a paradigm shift, not just in the minds, but the actual landscape of the world. The emergent new world order of structure and thinking would not have been manifested. We would still have a slave state per say with just those at the helm, with education for the wealthy and of noble lineage and the classism of different nations would still be ruling

Alexander the Great as he is known by far, the greatest human military strategist and ruler ever lived. He demanded complete allegiance which might border on the line of Insanity. He used ancient structures and tactics that he was trained in. Knowledge dept taught by Aristotle to question and reason analytical situations. Wealth, tyranny and manipulation to control. His insight and depth of reasoning was far beyond his age group. His ability to think beyond the norm and organize to get efficiency and mobility at the projected expense, was seen as very advantageous, driven by his insatiable appetite to conquer the world, and bringing about lasting changes to the world was the strategic move needed to replace old structures and implement new policies.

Bibliography

Alexander the Great defeat Persian empire

<https://www.history.com/amp/news/alexander-the-great-defeat-persian-empire>

Alexander the great conquered Persian battle at Gaugamela

<https://www.Greekreporter.com/2022/10/03alexander-the-great-conquered-persian-battle->

How did Alexander the great change the course of history

<https://www.Wondriundaily.com/>

Ancient Greece-Alexander the great

<https://www.Britannica.com/place/ancient-Greece/Alexander-the-great>