Presentation Student Report

The names of those in my group are as follows: Gloria Park, Jessica Lee, Monom Teekham, and Dale Richardson. On a scale of 1 to 10, 10 being the highest, I would rate my participation as a 10. I was the selected spokesperson and so-called leader of the group, and thus coordinated our meetings, both online and in person. Furthermore, I assigned roles to each person and followed up to check in at appropriate benchmarks, such as gathering resources, defining thesis and key issues, and doing research on our respective portions of the main issue at hand. The most significant thing I learned from this group activity was the need to constantly communicate and work together as a team in order to construct a cohesive thesis with key resources and issues identified, based on individual and collective research. To be honest, this was the most challenging aspect as well. Especially as the leader, I see room for improvement in communicating more clearly and regularly with my team members, regarding both expectations and deadlines, so as to create further cohesiveness. While some of this was out of my control, such as us having varying schedules and being unable to meet all at once for certain meetings, as well as by extension, certain parts being more delayed than others, I believe in the end we were able to create a unified presentation with a strong message and interconnected flow.
