

Esmeralda Sime

2/23/23

Lyndell O'hara

World civilization

A couple basic daily life changes within the years of 1820 and 1920 are the transportation, Jobs, planes, and other resources such as refrigerators, radios, and new inventions such as the spinning Jenny. Back then in the 1820's it was like living in the 1700's in which clothes were washed and dried outside, when people would go into town there were no cars to carry anything back unless you were lucky enough to own a horse. Jobs were a lot different from the 1800 to the 1920 some individuals owned shops. The refrigerators helped food not go bad as quickly that would cause food poisoning. The new inventions such as the spinning Jenny were improvements for example widders would widdle by hand while this invention helped the process go by a lot more smoother and safer. The invention of the steam engine, which transformed the way goods were transported and provided power to factories. The industrial operations refers to the negative impacts that industrialization had on certain groups of people, particularly those who were most vulnerable to its effects.

The groups that experienced industrial oppression were workers that were more in factories and workers in general for instance the working class experienced exploitation and oppression in the form of long hours, dangerous working conditions, low wages, and limited rights and protections. Workers were often subjected to brutal working conditions and suffered from occupational diseases and injuries. Children and a lot of the women worked in harsh conditions that were extremely dangerous. The working class as the industry expanded, a new class of urban workers emerged, employed in factories and other industrial settings. They identified with their class through trade unions, mutual aid societies, and political organizations. The gender restrictions became more rigid in many ways. This period saw the rise of the "separate spheres" ideology, which held that men belonged in the public sphere of work and politics, while women belonged in the domestic sphere of the home and family.