Film Response Week 6

Within the crash course John Greene covers many different points about the industrial revolution. Some of the changes we see from 1820 to 1920 include the rise of new cities and factories, technology is also being implemented which is a major development. John Greene also highlights the improvements in transportation and communication. Industrial oppression has a major impact on lower class people. They were subject to harsh working conditions and low wages.

Through the rise of social classes, the gender restrictions became more prevalent. Women were restricted from job opportunities and were more seen as housewives. While some rose to the top of social classes, many were left behind poor and stuck working in these factories.

Overall, the industrial revolution had both a positive and negative impact, but it is still something we feel today.
