

I feel like the most important differences between the modern era and the Agrarian World is the slow communication and gender powers. In today's era we are used to instant and direct messages that you receive in seconds. This compared to the Agrarian World is extremely bizarre because they would have to hand deliver messages and either say it in person or send someone to pass it on. This also shows that now the messages are more credible because if someone else passes your message on they could misinterpret your message.

The next most important difference is also that all of the Agrarian World leaders were male. In today's era you are starting to see women in power. For example, Kamala Harris being vice president that would never be a thought for the Agrarian World. Now there is an understanding that everyone is equal that wasn't a thing in the Agrarian times.

I believe that now that we have so many technologies there are different importances in life. In the Agrarian time air conditioning were some peoples jobs. Now we just have people that will either install or fix these overlooked things. We value materialistic things while people in that time would simply fantasize over having working air generated. It shows my values because I value more materialistic things than the simplicity of having a comfortable bed.
