4.1

Person A: IS someone who seem rude and judgemental towards me and other people always pushing her "faith" on people never considering their backgrounds

Person B: IS someone who I am friends with but judges my buttons because of the way they act the one often to much of a "mom" and tend to judge you based off of your actions

1) A) When this person is loud I roll my eyes and get annoyed when me and my friends are loud I don't even think twice

B) When this person makes comments on people's attitudes I get pissed but when I am taking people's attitudes into consideration I just ignore it

2) A) They take care of others but they constant singing kills me

B) They do everything out of the goodness of their hearts but they often take that too far

2) A) Because they are my roommates they are always around I never get a break

B) They are my friend so I see all that they are doing

4) A) she force her story and songs on us from day one tried to push the gays out of one of my friends

B) seemed kind but controlling

5) 4) I think that maybe the bridge is too burned for us to have common relationship / interests

B) I assume they would know my time limit when they clearly don't conclusion: I do believe that all of these aspects will impact my perspective of people in a positive way, more than a positive way.

The challenge to first impression tends to be the most iniquite for me.

There is an open mind

9-2 Women can play a role in church is an argument I have had many times in the church and with a few people that I am close to.

1) Men and women are created equal and are called to spread the word in all the ways they are called hence why they should play a role within the church.

2. I can understand that women can bring more emotions to the table some of which can be negative and over power the true meaning and importance

3. we both have been able to find things that support our argument within the bible and we must consider in what context those verses were written

4. If the person isn't willing to at least hear my points at least and be willing to hear about them then I will most likely judge them. I also think if the other person just says because I will try very hard to convince them. If we can both accept each others points then I think I could grow and love the person

Pt 3:

1) I was easy and forgiving.

2) I think it makes me more aware of what is going on and how to address the situation.

3) If you are both open it can lead to a more honest relationship which can remain open and healthy

4-4 1) I think it would allow more openness to different perspectives

2) making sure I am clear and open to different opinions

3) I don't think it was hard I always love trying to see the other side

4. I will allow them to feel like they have a choice and can be more open to such things.

5. I feel like it will me a more trusting and open relationship.

4.6 1) Jorge views himself as hardworking and high up in his job and feels as though he deserves certain things because of his time he has worked there. Marisa feels as the supervisor she has the right to move around schedules and hire new people, and to do this she needs Jorge to compromise.

2) These different perceptions may cause them to butt heads and not understand each other's point of view.

3) Because I have been working here so long, I feel like that should have some impact in my schedule however, I understand we need to hire other nurses as is there a way we can both compromise to make this change.

I understand how long you have been here but to be able to support the elderly we both need to make compromise for this to work.
