What If?

What if Ahsoka had never converted to Buddhism, this would have enormously impacted how India would have been controlled. If Ahsoka had not converted to Buddhism, he likely would have been a pacifist. With that, he would be in constant battles and fights with extreme violence. Ahsoka was known for being very powerful, so he would likely use his power to grow and expand his empire out of India. That said, Buddhism is a well-known and popular teaching in India. So If Ahsoka had never converted, we would not see as large of an impact in the world today. When he converted his kingdom to Buddhism, he sent his monks across the globe to convert others to the Buddhist religion to encourage peace worldwide. If he had never done that, the world would be corrupt and full of war and battles. If he had never converted and chosen peace, he would have taken over so much of the world that he could have potentially invaded Europe, which would have had an extreme impact on the world today. We wouldn't have Greece and many other countries we do have today. With all that, the world would be seen in an extreme difference of Ahsoka never converting to Buddhism. He was a mighty emperor and understood how to battle. With his conversion, he could make peace and stop what could have led to major wars.
