What role does class play in Ellis's advice about proper womanly behavior? What frame value can you detect behind her writing?

The role that class plays in Ellis advice about a woman properly value is that the woman has to be soft. She has to respond to people grieving with a loving heart. The role that class plays is self control. The frame value I detect here is how women were supposed to act back in the day. And the frame value I detect here is when they used to have servants.

How is this an argument in favor of female power?

It is in argument in favor of female power because she mentions the fact that women should not get domestic affairs only, it should be intertwined. And they should be allowed to try on new ideas.
