The Bhagavad Gita centers around the teachings of the Hindu God, Vishnu. In the Hindu faith Vishnu is the supreme being and can go in and out of many different forms. In the poem Vishnu is disguised as Krishna, the protagonist's trusted advisor. In chapters 10 and 11 Krishna reveals their true form to Arjuna being described as “the whole universe/enfolded, with its countless billions/of life-forms” overwhelming Arjuna (11.12). The digital image above shows I envision Vishnu’s true form to be him in the middle of earth and space, having an all knowing presence in an abstract form.
