Who has helped form who you are?

My family has helped form who I am. Ever since I was young my family always loved me and supported me for who I am. Not only that but they taught me many important lessons throughout my childhood. They also taught me the importance of being a christian and guided me in the right direction. However they never forced me to serve God. They also showed me that I can have fun in christ, ever since I can remember my family took me to fun places to enjoy, this kept me occupied and as I got older I understood that I didn't have to compromise in the world in order to have fun. At a very young age my family knew of my gift in music and one of the things that my mother taught me especially is to always stay humble. If I had a solo selection at a guest church (or anywhere) once I finished playing and singing she would immediately take me to the bathroom or in the hall so that way the attention that was on me ministering would come off. Something that she would say after I'm done playing and singing is "go sit somewhere". And at the time I didn't understand fully so I just listened to her. But now I understand that music brings a lot of attention and it can be very easy to begin to be prideful in a gift. I truly thank God for my family, they helped make me who I am today.
