Advocacy Letter

Dear: Phil of Harlem Times Magazine

Today I come to you as an advocate of the NASW, and a supporter of the American students. This letter I have written below is not to address you in any way, but to request your help in promoting a plead to the president of the United States; Mr. Joe Biden.

The date of January 20, 2021 was a special day in the U.S., it was the date that Joe Biden was sworn as America 46th president. The excitement that day for many people was ecstatic, it was a time of excel. As a citizen with a fist full of hopes for the future of this country, I recalled this moment like it was yesterday; watching Mr. Biden deliver a speech about what his goals and plans to accomplish while in office, which includes the promise of canceling student loan debt. Over two years later, students are still placed in an oppressive economic situation, wondering what's next, while drowning in financial debt. It's also hard for student parents who are pursuing their journey of becoming a professional member of society; but unfortunately struggle to maintain good credit due to the challenges of paying off over 37, 000 in student debt, which is the minimum average for most students. This struggle for most students around the country is not your fault Mr. Biden, this problem has been a rock in the road for the American people for quite a long time now, but the resolution to this issue was a promise that you stated to tackle; as you stated, " When I announced, I was going to run for the presidency this time, I made it clear that I had three goals. The first and most important goal was to give middle-class families and working-class families a fighting chance. They'd been on the short end of the stick for a long time, across the board — across the board. And that's why I said whether it's the tax policy or whether it's education policy — whatever it is — when the middle class has a — you're going to build this economy from the middle out and the bottom up."

This past December, over 28 Million borrowers applied for a Student Loan Forgiveness, receiving an online Student aid application form; provided for the people by the government. Three months later, nothing happened; it's almost as if the document request that excited the people was only a host. Why is it start to feel like thought of liberation from financial debt is being dangled over our heads.

In conclusion, let's stand on our word. Students are still in full support of you Mr. Biden, because what you stand for is injustice and equality, which we believe is what makes America great again. The excitement from this recent inauguration was hope; and I hope that you get the chance to receive this message. Blessing to you our President and much hope to the future of this country.

Yours Truly,

Citizen of the American union.

Thanks to Harlem Times for all support.
