

The most important lesson I've learned was the harshest lesson I've learned. One day I was getting ready for school, and I got into an argument with my father, and at the end of the argument, my father called me worthless. at the time I was furious that he would say such a thing to me. I went about with my day and the entire day I can't what he said in my mind. I complained about it to my friend and did what teenagers do when they're mad. For some reason I couldn't shake the feeling that he wasn't wrong all at first I thought he was just trying to say this to hurt me but he wasn't. Throughout the week I would look back to that moment and just try to figure out why I had such an odd feeling about what he said. I couldn't determine if it was negative or positive. I finally came to the conclusion that he wasn't trying to hurt my feelings he was telling me that as a person I need to have worth. More weeks of time to pass, and I still have some part of that conversation in the back of my mind. I finally had a conversation with my father, and he told me that if you cannot provide or if you are worth anything then you will either be discarded or forgotten in this world, at first I didn't know what to make of it. I thought of it as a threat but there was no hostility, coming from the words, he said it was a warning about the truth of the world. He told me what I needed to hear simply because he knew if I didn't hear this, I will go into this world, without developing myself, with some type of worth in order to survive. I keep this as a valuable lesson simply because I choose to help build myself and continuously improve and evolve. I choose to add to this résumé We call life so in hopes that someday I will meet the qualifications for the things I want in life whether it be money comfortability, or even love. I carry with me this was sent even now sent me because they helped me improve myself. If I do not manage, what I'm worth, I'll eventually be discarded and forgotten, and things like that usually lead to negative things such as homelessness or starvation or worse. To be put in such a position would scare me because nobody in this world, would like to be on the worst off side of civilization and society.
