

Week 9 Film Review

- A few things that I learned from the film is that Franz Ferdinand's uncle had to defend the death of his nephew even though he didn't like him very much.
- The trenches were dug by men who would end up dying, leaving the trenches to smell like rotting flesh they were 25 miles long and zig zag
- more people died from the Spanish flu than the actual war.
- The fighting took place so close to the neighboring countries' homes that they could receive their local newspaper only two days late.
- The USA became a big world player in World War I, becoming a lender to allied countries instead of being in debt.
