I am heavily looking forward to my final show as it will be one of the few that I have done solely by myself, and because of that, I plan to focus my final show on me. I feel that my listeners have not gotten to know me throughout the semester as much as I would have liked them to, and by giving them a run down of who I am, and what I will be up to in the short term future, I feel it will give them a greater understanding of who I am, and how they will be able to keep up with me and my life, should they choose to do so.

I will begin my show by making an emphasis on the upcoming nurse's week for a couple of different weeks. For starters, later in the show I will be talking about my family, and find it important to mention that my mother is a nurse, and I see it as one of the most selfless career paths a person can take. I will also be mentioning the week because after the past few years, the world has gone through some very crazy things, and in those few years, nurses have had the greatest impact on health and medicine that the world has ever seen. Lastly, I will throw out some trivia or fun facts, and will try to encourage a call from my mom and her office to give us some words from nurses, and just thank them for everything they do. This largely plays into the Alliance core value socially relevant; however, it is not the main idea of this segment.

I plan to lead into my upcoming summer plans which will include my trip to Italy that I will be taking through the school, where I will emphasize the importance of the Alliance core value, globally engaged. Alliance stresses the importance of being globally engaged as the school motto is, "Spreading the whole Gospel to the whole World," with an emphasis on, "the whole World." Throughout the class over the semester I have learned a lot about Italy's history, and we will travel throughout Italy taking in so much culture, and learning about how God's message moved throughout each city, that I think the entire class has been the epitome of what it means to be globally engaged. I plan to follow this by talking about my other summer plans including other trips I will be taking, activities I will be doing during holidays, birthdays and birthday celebrations I will be partaking in, weddings I will be attending, and this will lead into my talk about my family.

(I will not currently emphasize too much on this topic, as it is not something that carries any core values, it is just meant to support the final show's "All About Me," theme.)

Finally I will close the show by ending it with things I am looking forward to, come the fall semester. I plan to lightly touch on the unknown fate of the University's future, and will play this into how I will be a senior this coming year. I will mention everything the fall semester has to offer me including a trip to Hawaii with the volleyball team with our new coach, and new team, as well as my 21st birthday. I will essentially circle this all back into how I am graduating a year early, and will show how Alliance fostered me with a place to excel in the classroom as one of their student athletes. I will share how this highlights another core value of theirs: Academically Excellent. I feel that being academically excellent is best displayed by a student (me) who not only excels as a student, and student athlete, but also can prove it through the support, and empowerment given to her by her peers, professors, coaches, and all the staff at Alliance.

In my final words, I will mention a farewell that encapsulates my time as a WNYK radio intern, as well as how I was personally transformed (another core value, though without heavy emphasis) through the show, and throughout my time as an Alliance student. I will share lightly about my journey in growing a relationship with God, and will close out my final show in prayer. The prayer will begin with gratitude for everything I have been given, and will end with a hope for all of my listeners, that God blesses them, blesses their futures, blesses the chapter of life they are in, and blesses me as we all take a leap into the future.
