Communism and Fascism

Russia and China were underdeveloped at the start of the communist theory. Russia did not have a capitalist class but its ideology was to start communism there, and it would force a party led dictatorship eventually. Chinese had put lower classed Agrarians at the forefront of the revolution. Chinese ideology promoted modernization and also a party leader. Identity was a non-factor within the groups. With fascism, the ideologies pushed for more state power and did not allow for social changes. Italy was the first fascist state and many of its leaders turned this country into a dictatorship as well through private life and the economy and military. Italy wanted to have people believe that they would be restoring for better, but instead they were resistant to the state of bringing the society together in a positive way. It was a goal of grabbing more countries to build a larger nation at best.
