

3) How would you describe the hierarchical system? What responsibilities did each group have to the general welfare of the society?

In the Mayan civilization depicted in "The Blood of the Kings," the hierarchical system was multi-layered. At the top were the divine kings, followed by the powerful nobles and priests. Commoners made up the majority and were responsible for farming, crafting, and providing labor. Each group had specific responsibilities for the welfare of the society, with rulers responsible for governance, religious leadership, and military defense, and commoners providing labor and resources. The system was characterized by a complex interplay of power and responsibility, with each group playing a critical role in the civilization's functioning.
