The most crucial thing I learned from this class is how to write a well-organized essay and pay attention to grammar. The first step to composing an essay is to make sure I can interpret my thoughts on the paper thoroughly and orderly, like combing my messy hair. I must know the sequence, what should come first, and what is second. Without mapping the whole thing in my mind, I cannot write a desirable paper. Sometimes I may not even know what I should write about. Grammar could be the difficult one. When using colloquial language, people are likely to ignore grammar because the only purpose is to let others understand, not handing in a formal paper. So it does take quite some time for me to make sure my essay has no issues.
