India Gupta Empire

Takeaways:

1. There was an eyewitness to the time when the Gupta Empire was created. The foreigner migrated from China, seeking the wisdom of India, describing the country as rich and prosperous through its practice of righteousness.
2. The way the king governed was very interesting and different. He governed without capital punishment, and people did not kill any living creature throughout the country. It was also a country where both Buddhism and Hinduism thrived together.
3. China was considered the master of ceramics, but Indians were masters of metal, particularly iron. This is why the Gupta's technological achievements and "marvelous engineering features" were so influential. Moreover, they focused on high quality, allowing them to take a major leap in art and technology.
4. After defeating the Huns, the Gupta kings focused on making their empire the center of high culture, adding drama and literature to the list of skills they specialized in. In addition, some of their most outstanding achievements were in science, making them even more brilliant. For example, Indian astronomers were the ones who proved that the earth went around the Sun and came up with the concept of Pi.
